The man was no fiend; she could see his leather satchel. Her eyes watered triumphantly, and she let her gaze drop back towards the house: the window of her bedroom, the Michaelmas daisy she and Ma had planted over the poor, dead body of Constable the cat, the chink in the bricks where, embarrassingly, she used to leave notes for the fairies. Laurel has never gotten over seeing her mother stab and kill a man with their bi Brea Brown. This one will be one of my final books for -planning on that anyways.

It confirmed that starting with the first book, Dex has liked Sophie more than
On a sweltering summer's day, while her family picnics by the stream on their Suffolk farm, sixteen-year-old Laurel hides out in her childhood tree house dreaming of a boy called Billy, a move to London, and the bright future she can't wait to seize.
